

Early Childhood Development

Overview of Early Childhood Development

We know early childhood, ages zero to five, is a critical period for a child's growth and development. Understanding what to expect is an important protective factor in reducing child maltreatment and promoting child well-being. Training participants will receive information on the following topics: building a healthy brain, social-emotional development, and understanding temperaments. Please join us over the course of two days for five hours of training credit.

Training Objectives

By the end of this training, participants will:

- Understand basic brain development
- Gain increased insight on effects of trauma on the developing brain
- Understand basics of child development and age-appropriate expectations
- Increase awareness of differences in child development and developmental delays
- Learn about emotional intelligence and how to increase it
- Increase awareness of temperaments and how they complement or clash

Audience

This training is ideal for case managers, social workers, early childcare providers, parents, foster parents and anyone else interested in understanding early childhood development for effective interaction with young children.
